Private Sector Disaster Recovery Plan

Disaster recovery and redevelopment planning for Georgia's private-sector is in progress...

Brunswick, GA - After a busy hurricane season in 2017, the Georgia Department of Natural Resources Coastal Resources Division is working with business leaders to create a guidance document to help private-sector organizations recover from disasters. The resources in this document are intended to empower business owners by providing recommendations and tools to re-open after an event.

September 2017: Flooding in Brunswick, Georgia during Hurricane Irma

The private-sector is a critically important factor in community recovery. Our hope is to make disaster recovery easier and more efficient by reducing impacts and providing access to governmental and community resources. This will help the affected community retain this vital part of a community's economy and infrastructure; speeding up the overall process of making the community feel like home again. The project's biggest challenge is clearly identifying the needs of its audience: Georgia's business owners.

Please help identify the private sectors disaster recovery needs. The project team has prepared a two-minute survey to find out what resources, information, or tools business owners in Georgia need most to re-open after natural or man-made disasters. Is it timely and prompt updates from state and local government? An address book for utilities and public services? We want to hear from you!

To share your insight, please complete the two-minute survey at:
